complained about the water crisis and the effects it was having on the citys children and adults were met initia lly with a persistent tone of scorn and derision. When a local physician, Dr. Mona Hanna-Attisha, reported eleva ted levels of lead in the blood of Flint's children, she was dismissed as a quack and attacked for sowing hysteria

. When the US ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY (EPA) warned that the state was testing the wa ter in a way that could profoundly understate the lead levels, they were met with silence. The New York Times a dded fuel to the fire engulfing key government officials by noting that a top aide to Michigans governor referred to people raising questions about the quality of Flints water as an anti-everything group. Other critics were acc used of turning complaints about water into a political football. And worrisome findings about lead by a concern ed pediatrician were dismissed as data, in quotes. As a last straw, government officials blamed both landlords a nd tenants for neglecting to service lead-laden pipes that ran through most of the city. What they failed to ment ion was that the states attempt to save money by refusing to add an anti-corrosive chemical to the water is wha t caused the pipes to leach lead. Many states have lead-laden pipes but the water supplies are treated in order to prevent corrosion and toxic contamination. Comparably, Hurricane Katrina revealed what right-wing Republi cans and Democrats never wanted the public to see: the needless suffering and deaths of poor residents, the e lderly, the homeless and others who were the most vulnerable and powerless to fight against the ravages of a p olitical and economic system that considered them redundant. a drain on the economic system and ultimately d isposable. FLINT imposed a different order of misery and one more consciously malevolent creating a gene ration of children with developmental disabilities for whom there will more than likely be no adequate services, e ither at present or when they become adults. These are the populations the Republicans and some right-wing D emocrats since the 1980s have been teaching us to disdain and view as undeserving of the social, political and personal rights accorded to middle-class and ruling elites. [Credit: Min Tang and Kelsey Pieper.]Both Katrina a nd FLINT laid bare a new kind of politics in which entire populations, even children, are considered disposab le, an unnecessary burden on state coffers, and consigned to fend for themselves. In the case of FLINT, chil dren were knowingly poisoned while people who were warning the Snyder administration and FLINT residen ts about the dangerous levels of lead in the water were derided and shamed. Also laid bare was the neoliberal m antra that government services are wasteful and that market forces can take care of everything. This is a profit-d riven politics that strips government of its civic functions, gives rise to massive inequality and makes clear a thr ee-decades-long official policy of benign neglect being systemically transformed into a deadly form of criminal m alfeasance. How else to explain that while Snyder eventually admitted to the crisis in FLINT, he not only tried to blame the usual suspect, inefficient government, but also once again made clear that the culture of cruelty u nderlying his neoliberal policies is alive and well? This was evident in his decision to charge residents extremel y high bills for poisoned water and his decision to continue sending shutoff notices to past-due accounts despit e widespread popular condemnation. At stake here is a politics of disposability, one that views an expanding nu mber of individuals and groups as redundant, superfluous and unworthy of care, help and social provisions. Th e poor Black residents of FLINT and countless other cities in the United States now represent disposable po pulations that do not present an ethical dilemma for the financial elite and the politically corrupt. Social death no w works in tandem with physical death as social provisions necessary to enable people to live with dignity, dece ncy and good health are taken away, regardless of the misery and suffering that results. The confluence of fina nce, militarization and corporate power has not only destroyed essential collective structures in support of the p ublic good, but such forces have destroyed democracy itself in the United States. In a society in which it is mor e profitable to poison children rather than give them a decent life, incarcerate people rather than educate them a nd replace a pernicious species of self-interest for any vestige of morality and social responsibility, politics is em ptied out, thoughtlessness prevails and the commanding institutions of. society become saturated with violence

. Americans are now living in an age of forgetting, an age in which a flight from responsibility is measured in inc reasing acts of corruption, violence, trauma and the struggle to survive. Decaying schools, poisoned water and the imposition of emergency managers on cities largely populated by poor Black people represent more than t he catastrophe of indifference described by psychoanalyst Stephen Grosz: There is also a systemic, conscious act of criminality and lawlessness in which people of color and poor people no longer count. and are rendered e xpendable. The FLINT water crisis is not an isolated incident. Nor is it a function of an anarchic lawlessness a dministered by blundering politicians and administrators. Rather, it is a corporate lawlessness that thrives on an d underwrites the power and corruption of the financial elite. Such lawlessness owes its dismal life to a failure o f conscience and a politics of disposability in the service of a political economy which has become a criminal ec onomy. FLINT is symptomatic of a mode of politics and governance in which the categories of citizens and d emocratic representation, once integral to a functioning polity, are no longer recognized, and vast populations a re subject to conditions that confer upon them the status of the living dead. Under the auspices of life-threateni ng austerity policies, not only are public goods defunded and the commons devalued, but the very notion of wh at it means to be a citizen is reduced to narrow forms of consumerism. At the same time, politics is hijacked by corporate power and the ultra-rich. As Wendy Brown writes in Undoing the Demos, this makes politics unappe aling and toxic full of ranting and posturing, emptied of intellectual seriousness, and pandering to an uneducate d and manipulable electorate and a celebrity-and-scandal-hungry corporate media. Nowhere is this better exem plified than in Donald Trumps rise to political power in the United States. What happened in FLINT is not abo ut the failure of electoral politics, nor can it be attributed to bureaucratic mishaps or the bungling of an incompe tent administration. As Third Coast Conspiracy points out, the FLINT crisis is necessarily understood through the lens of disposability, one that makes visible new modes of governance for those populations, particularly lo w-income groups, that are rendered permanently superfluous to the needs of capital, and are expelled from the labor process, waged employment, and. increasingly, from what remains of the welfare state. These are raced populations poor Black and Brown people who are not simply the victims of prejudice, but subject to systems t hat orchestrate the siphoning of resources away from some populations and redirect them toward others. Thes e systems do more than just define which lives matter and which lives dont they materially make some lives m atter by killing others more, according to Third Coast Conspiracy. As democratic institutions are hollowed out, p powerful forms of social exclusion and social homelessness organized at the intersection of race and poverty co me into play. In Identity: Conversations With Benedetto Vecchi, Zygmunt Bauman discusses how these forms o f social exclusion produce without apology the most conspicuous cases of social polarization, of deepening ine quality, and of rising volumes of human poverty, misery and humiliation. How else to explain the criminal inactio n on the part of the Snyder administration once they learned that Flints residential drinking water was contamin ated by lead and other toxic chemicals? [Credit: Regina H. Boone/Detroit Free Press.]Cruel Hypocrisy A numbe r of emails from various administration officials later revealed that Snyder had received quite a few signs that th e citys water was contaminated and unsafe to drink long before he made a decision to switch back to the Detro it water system. Unfortunately, he acted in bad faith by not taking any action. A few months after the initial wate r switch, General Motors discovered that the water from the FLINT River was causing their car parts to erode and negotiated with the state to have the water supply at their corporate offices switched back to the Detroit w ater system. Similarly, a FLINT hospital noticed that the water was damaging its instruments and decided to s et up its own private filtering system. A local university did the same thing. David Rosner and Gerald Markowitz observed that 10 months before the administration of Governor Snyder admitted that Flints water was unsafe t o drink, the state had already begun trucking water into that city and setting up water coolers next to drinking fo untains in state buildings in order for state workers to be. able to drink a safe alternative to the FLINT water. A nd Dorian Bon notes that at the beginning of 2015, an ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY official h ad notified the state about lead contamination, only to be ignored by the Snyder administration and taken off th e investigation by his EPA superiors. It was only after a lead scientist from the EPA and a volunteer team o f researchers from Virginia Tech University conducted a study of Flints water supply and concluded that it was u nsafe that the Snyder administration came clean about the poisoned water supply but not before the Michigan Department of Environmental. Quality had tried to discredit the research findings of the group. As one of the vo lunteers, Siddhartha Roy, pointed out in an interview with Sonali Kolhatkar, we were surprised and shocked to s ee [the government] downplaying the effects of lead in water, ridiculing the results that all of us had released, a nd even questioning the results of a local FLINT pediatrician. They tried to discredit us researchers. But it wa s too late. The scientists may have been vindicated, but not before close to 9,000 children under the age of 6 h ad been poisoned. [Credit: threesonorans.com.]Historical Memory and the Politics of Disappearance These act s of state-sponsored violence have reinforced the claim by the Black Lives Matter movement that Snyders actio ns represent a racist act and that it is part of systemic, structurally based brutality and that the water crisis wou

Id never have happened in. more affluent, white communities like Grand Rapids or Grosse Pointe, as Susan J.

Douglas has pointed out. Poor people of color suffer the most from such practices of environmental racism, an d poor Black and Brown children in particular suffer needlessly, not just in FLINT, but also in cities all over th e United States. This is a crisis that rarely receives national attention because most of the children it affects are Black, Brown, poor and powerless. Some health experts have called lead poisoning a form of state-sponsored child abuse and a silent epidemic in America. As Nicholas Kristof makes clear: In FLINT, 4.9 percent of child ren tested for lead turned out to have elevated levels. Thats inexcusable. But in 2014 in New York State outsid e of New York City, the figure was 6.7 percent. In Pennsylvania, 8.5 percent. On the west side of Detroit, one-fi ftth of the children tested in 2014 had lead poisoning. In Iowa for 2012, the most recent year available, an aston ishing 32 percent of children tested had elevated lead levels. (I calculated most of these numbers from C.D.C. d ata.)Across America, 535,000 children ages 1 through 5 suffer lead poisoning, by C.D.C. estimates. We are ind eed all FLINT, says Dr. Philip Landrigan, a professor of preventive medicine at the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai. Lead poisoning continues to be a silent epidemic in the United States. This is a manufactured c risis parading as a cost-cutting measure under Republican and Democratic parties that supported neoliberal-ins pired austerity measures and aggressive deregulation. it is also the toxic byproduct of a form of predatory neo liberal capitalism that places profits above all human needs and social costs. As Rosner and Markowitz argue, t he poisoning of Black and Latino children represents a broader political and economic crisis fed by a mix of rac ism and corporate greed that have put lead and other pollutants into millions of homes in the United States. Bu t pointing to a mix of racism and corporate greed does not tell the entire story either about the crisis in or the b roader crisis of environmental racism. And solutions demand more than fixing the nations infrastructure, replac ing the countrys lead pipes, curbing the power of polluting corporations or making visible what amounts nationa lly to a public health crisis. FLINT suffers from a much broader crisis of politics, agency, memory and democ racy that now haunts the future of the United States with the threat of an impending authoritarianism. The Politi cs of Domestic Terrorism Snyders decision to keep quiet for over a year about the contaminated water was com parable in my view to an act of domestic terrorism a form of systemic intimidation and violence done by the sta te against powerless people. Historical memory might serve us well here. Not only is terror one of the United S tates chief exports, but it is also a part of a long legacy that extends from the genocide of indigenous peoples a nd the violence of slavery to racist police shootings of unarmed black adults and youth and males and females i n Chicago Charlotte, and. New York. What is happening in is an expression of a broader narrative, ideology, s et of policies and values bound up with a politics of disposability that has become one of the distinctive features of neoliberal capitalism. Disposability has a long history in the United States but it has taken on a greater signi ficance under neoliberalism and has become an organizing principle of the authoritarian state, one that has inte nsified and expanded the dynamics of class and racial warfare. Privatization, commodification and deregulation are now merged with what historian David Harvey has called the process of accumulation by dispossession.' E xtracting capital, labor, time, land and profits from the poor and powerless is now a central feature of austerity i n the age of precarity, and has become a first principle of casino. Buchheit rightly labels the ultra-rich in the U nited States as the real terrorists who buy off politicians and lobbyists responsible for making poor children disp osable, gutting the welfare state, enabling billionaires to hide their wealth in offshore accounts, corrupting poli
